

There's too much at stake for NZers to stop fighting for Marriage.

When politicians voted to redefine an age-old institution, it wasn't just marriage they put at risk. They undermined New Zealand, a society built on the cornerstone of marriage and family stability. By ignoring the voice of the people (again), they also undermined democracy, another cornerstone for our country.

But it's not over. Those of us who believe in the sanctity of marriage between one man and one woman can still turn things around come election time. We need to remember how the politicians voted:
